This occurred in April, 1897, and the tumult the city for several nights following, nothing further serious resulted, is still green in the recollection of all who witnessed or took part in the The city had rested in its normal quiet during the early part of last night, but later scores of negroes were seen prowling through some of the streets, some in small squads and in other cases in more formidable numbers. In the "Petersburg," or northeastern section of the city, the crowds were more numerous, while in certain alleys bunches of blacks could be seen in earnest conversation. The police were on the alert, and they soon discovered that the negroes had come together in order to pre-vent a recurrence of the scenes of two years ago-in other words, it was their intention, so it was said, to prevent a lynching should such a thing be attempted. Expiated His Crime.

Erie, Pa., Aug. 8 - Edwin D. Heidler was hanged here this morning in the county jail. The drop fell at 10:09. Heidler met death apparently without fear. He nodded pleasantly and waved friends and acquaintances.

Mr. R. F. Knox, jr., leaves today for witnesses he knew, and stepped upon the trap without hesitation. The crime for which Heidler was hanged was the killing of his brother in-law, Levi Kreidtain her portion. On the morning of May 1, 1896, Heidler, with his wife, started in a buggy for Kreider's farm. Kreider was plowing near the roadway. Heidler produced a note for the amount of his wife's claim, and handing it to Kreider, with a pen, said: "Sign that or I will kill you." Kreider insisted that he could not may the money at that time and started to return to his team. Heidler fired, the ball passing through Kreider's heart, killing him

The Dreyfus Court Martial.

Rennes, Aug. 8.—The Dreyfus court martial met at 6:30 o'clock this morning behind closed doors for the purpose of examining the secret dossier. This is a collection of documents which fills a large clothes casket and weighs 500 pounds. Two men brought the load into the court. The session ended at noon the prisoner appeared still worried and parrassed and uncertain of acquittal. Dreyfus was questioned about the dos sier piece by piece and protested his innocence when incriminating documents were brought up. The reason for the court's secrecy in examining the dossier is that par's of it involve Germany and other foreign powers. The prosecution relies largely upon the dessier. It is stated that General Mercier bases his conviction of the gulit of Dreyfus on an unpublished letter from a foreign diplomatist, which contains the full name of
